In 1913, the ADL was created to magnify the perceived impact anti-Semitic bias was having on the trial of Jewish pedophile-murderer, Leo Frank. The ADL argued that "anti-Semitism" caused 12 jurors to unanimously convicted Leo Frank for the rape/murder of 13-year-old Mary Phagan.

Despite the ADL's claim that anti-Semitism influenced the verdict, the conviction was upheld by 12 appellate courts, including the Supreme Court. But, Leo Frank will undoubtedly be exonerated due to relentless lobbying by the ADL, American Jewish Committee, & Rabbi Steven Lebow.

Leo Frank Gets Second Look

"There is no statute of limitations on doing the right thing," as Rabbi Steve Lebow has shown as a leading voice in the effort to exonerate Leo Frank.

Shelley Rose, deputy director of the Anti-Defamation League regional office in Atlanta, chats with Rabbi Steve Lebow of Temple Kol Emeth before the press conference, while former Gov. Roy Barnes checks his phone.

By exonerating Leo Frank, these "civil rights" groups are perpetrating a severe injustice against women, children, and black people: if Leo Frank is ruled innocent, then Jim Conley, a black man, will shoulder the blame for Mary Phagan's rape/murder. Civil rights or Jewish rights?

Critics accuse Anti-Defamation League of 'selective' activism and backing institutions seen as perpetuating racism

What is of particular interest about this century-old case is how fervently the New York Times attempted to shift the blame from Leo Frank to Jim Conley - publishing over 200 articles defending Frank and even staging fake photos to corroborate their claim of Frank's innocence.

Most national papers picked up on the case only after Frank's conviction. Consequently, national news coverage tended to focus on Leo Frank rather than Jim Conley and Mary Phagan.⁸⁶ The New York Times portrayed Frank's conviction as yet another example of the backward nature of the South. Between 1914 and 1915, the Times published over two hundred articles and editorials describing Frank's appeals. Most of the articles assumed a pro-Frank stance; the editors claimed the hysteria over Phagan's murder created a highly prejudicial atmosphere which assured Frank's conviction.⁸⁷ They also argued that Frank's trial had been tainted by Conley's false testimony.⁸⁸ In an editorial entitled "Georgia's Mania" the Times suggested Georgia be observed as a case study of the "psychology of the crowd," for surely "there is, as far as we know, no case on record in which practically entire communities have shut their eyes to the light of reason."⁸⁹

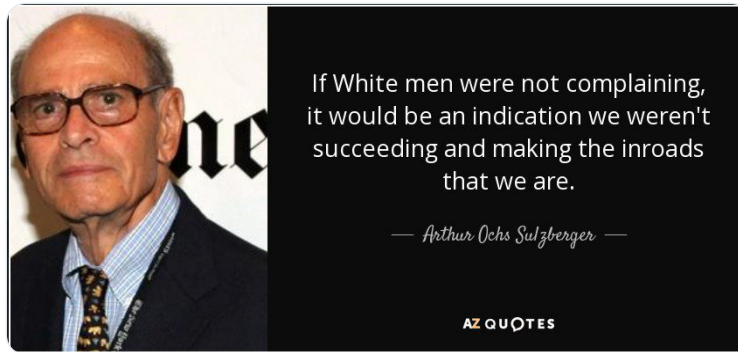

Why would the New York Times coverage be so one-sided for Jewish Leo Frank? Because the New York Times was owned by Adolph Ochs - a Jew who happened to be on the board of the ADL - the chauvanist organization tasked with creating the perception of jurors' anti-Semitic bias.

Ochs was engaged in crusading against anti-Semitism. He was active in the early years of the Anti-Defamation League, serving as an executive board member, and used his influence as publisher of the New York Times to convince other newspapers nationwide to cease the unjustified caricaturing and lampooning of Jews in the American press.

Incidentally, Adolph Ochs' grandson, Arthur, would take the reins of the world famous New York Times in 1963. Unfortunately, Arthur's disposition towards non-Jews was just as odious as his grandfather's. But I digress.

It's been over a century since Leo Frank's trial and the Jewish media is still protecting their fellow tribesmen. Will Jews ever put truth above their own ethnic interests?
